Criteria for inclusion of new journals

To be included in ERIH PLUS, journals must meet the following minimum requirements:

1. Established procedures for external peer review. The concept of external peer review refers to various forms of editorial procedures that differ between academic fields and scholarly journals, and which indicate that the manuscript has been evaluated by one or more independent experts on the subject matter.
2. Academic editorial board (or an equivalent), primarily consisting of scholars from universities, research institutes etc.
3. Valid ISSN code, confirmed by the international ISSN register
4. Publication of all original articles with abstracts in English and/or another language relevant for the field
5. Information on author affiliation and address
6. International or national authorship

Authorship of a journal is defined in accordance with the following operational criteria:

- Authorship is international when less than two thirds of the authors published in the journal are from the same country
- Authorship is national when more than two thirds of the authors published in the journal are from the same country
- Authorship is local when more than two thirds of the authors published in the journal are from the same institution

Scientific journals with local authorship will not be included in the ERIH PLUS list. National authorship is required as a minimum if external peer review is to function properly in a scientific journal. Otherwise, questions can be raised as to whether external peer review can function satisfactorily for a journal that primarily represents an institution's own researchers.

NSD determines the authorship of journals by reviewing the issues published during the last two years. Only original publications will be considered (translated works that have already been published will not be considered).

See also approval procedures.

We also check and add the following information about the journal:

- Country of publisher
- Type of publication
- Language
- Publisher
- Open Access (DOAJ or NSD)
